

Callous Followers of the True Law

Uriel

There may be some of you who happened to watch the television interview of Miss Chino and the spiritual phenomenon of Michael the Great. What I found most discouraging was that as a result of the television station editing the ten minute spiritual phenomenon down to three minutes, one announcer who saw it commented that "she (Miss Chino) seems to be possessed by a spirit so it is hard to understand what she is saying." Probably this announcer has nothing but the understanding and prejudices of the major newspapers and media of Japan which have a leftist bent and which spend all their time maligning Miss Chino and her group. This comment most likely reflects his thinking that the present True Law was of the same breed as all the other new religions of a dubious nature. It is obvious that this announcer never took the time to study the True Law. Or perhaps it could have been that this prejudiced announcer considered not understanding as being the neutral position.

There are still great numbers of people like this in Japan, who feel that as long as they maintain a sense of equanimity, their powers of judgement are second to none. There are many such individuals who speak and act irresponsibly within and without the mass media, and these people are under the illusion that they are the ones with authority in their country. These individuals can only be regarded as symbolizing the Japanese race which is about to meet its demise.

Another shameful thing that happened recently is that, to our regret, a woman in Nagoya attended meetings of the True Law for some time and felt she had gained the right to speak up, and she eventually came to convince herself and others that she was a genuine follower of the True Law. She then went on unintentionally to hurt a few other followers, and further brought shame to this whole group that was disseminating God's Law. She did not have a correct understanding of the True Law with her actions which were most unbecoming of a prospective member of the Celestial Realm. As a member of the Celestial Realm, I am appalled at the naivety of the followers of the True Law and wonder what kind of a person would treat this woman with respect and sacrifice on her behalf, when it was obvious that she was a most callous and worldly person, as well as a hardened egotist.

There has recently been an increase of rash words and behavior by young women, as well as by young men who follow these women and even go as far as to blindly follow the misled group and rebel against Heaven. Young people often fail to thoroughly consider the consequences of their behavior and they fail to see what lies ahead. The True Law, more than just conveying the beauty of Heaven, has to be the teaching of God which is guided by the strictness of righteousness. Since it is the teaching of God, there must not be one iota of rashness, worldliness, or narrowness in the thinking of its followers. When Heaven speaks of the future, this is always based on the foresight of eternal virtue and righteousness. I want you to bear these things firmly in mind, and those of you who are usually the audience in meetings of the True Law should at least develop your insight and make efforts to prevent mistakes which come from the rashness of youth. If older individuals make similar mistakes, there is no saving them. If such brazenness continues, the followers of Heaven will also be ultimately destroyed.
